FIRST in Alabama

As a native of Huntsville, Alabama, Jason has a passion for making impact in the community by encouraging youth to expand their talents in personalized career paths. After graduating from Alabama A&M University, he focused on driving innovative solutions in technology and manufacturing fields while working in challenging career positions. He wanted to do more than just use his talents in the corporate arena and felt he could make a difference in the community. His belief is that “It is Hope for the Future and Faith that are the Fuel that Keeps Us Alive and Running.” With this belief he organized the nonprofit organization Alabama School for Supply Chain and Manufacturing (ASSCM).

ASSCM was established in 2023 to help youth and young professionals have access to resources and personalized career paths in emerging industries such as supply chain, manufacturing and robotics technology. Underserved populations lack access to programs and information in these fields and Jason felt it was time to close that gap. With his background in logistics, program management, and strategic planning, Jason created a diverse team of professionals and community leaders to help high school graduates in minority populations with deciding on a career path. ASSCM recognizes talents and technical skills to match students with jobs in innovative fields that continue to grow in Huntsville. Jason is focused on doing what’s best for youth while addressing the talent management needs in Alabama’s top-rated city for growth in technology and supply chain.

Jason continues to work on collaborating with school districts, colleges and universities to spread awareness about the programs, resources, and workshops that ASSCM is working on that will benefit youth and young professionals. He’s creating solutions that will result in long-term benefits not only for the local community, but for the North Alabama region.

Jason has always been active in his community by using his time and talents to resolve immediate needs in various organizations. His past volunteer time included assisting at Huntsville Hospital, the Boys and Girls Club of North Alabama, Global Ties, Rose of Sharon, and serving on the Family Services Committee at Habitat for Humanity of Madison County. He was also on the Board of Directors for the Tennessee Valley Chapter of International Society
